Sunday of the Resurrection

31st March 2024

Believe in the Resurrection Today's gospel (John 20:1-9) is John's version of the first events on the Sunday morning in which Mary of Magdala is first to learn that the body of Jesus has gone, but John at first omits any detail of her seeing the empty space; it is merely implied in her report "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb." John also omits direct reference to others being present, but they may be implied in her saying "we do not know where they have put him." This allows John to emphasise Mary via a repetition typical of his peculiar style, so in the next section, 20:11-18 (which is read on Tuesday morning), she does look into the tomb and she sees the place where the body had been, but, with no reference to the binding cloths we are told she sees two angels. The already cited parts of her report are then repeated, with the Lord becoming my Lord and we becoming I. Then on encountering Jesus incognito, when she sees him yet sees him not, these repeat again, they becoming both you in "where you have put him" and I in "I will take him". Recognition comes to here only when he calls her by name; although she had seen the tomb empty she did not yet believe, but she believes now because she heard him whom she then saw. This progress in John slowly intensifies the encounter, making it more truly personal. It ends with Mary being the first to announce the resurrection when what she says to the disciples changes from "They have taken him... we know not where they put him" to "I have seen the Lord." This Mary is addressed today in the peculiar hymn called a Sequence that is sung before the gospel. In it she testifies that she has seen the risen Lord, leading to our response that we too know "Christ is truly risen form the dead."

In the meantime, that is, between the two reports about Mary of Magdala, Peter is first to enter the tomb to verify it is empty, and he sees the abandoned cloths, but he is closely accompanied by the Beloved Disciple who observes that someone had taken the trouble to roll up the headcover by itself; he saw and believed-or perhaps that should be reinterpreted: he did not see, that is, he saw the body of Jesus was not there, and he believed. Thus John (and also Luke) show us Mary of Magdala and Peter at that initial moment of incomprehension between seeing and understanding, when the mind cannot reconcile the contradictions between what it sees and what it already knows. Mary is led to knowledge, but Peter's status is left unclear. Between them is the Beloved Disciple who simply sees and believes; in him the threads of seeing and believing that run through the gospel are drawn together. His disposition finds a counterpoint later in the day (read next Sunday) in Thomas who in not seeing does not believe, and only on seeing the risen body does he believe, whence Jesus says "Since you have seen me you have believed; blessed are they who saw not and believed." The whole story is charged with that almost playful use of repetitions and reversals typical of John: first, disciples enter the tomb with its door already opened, and beholding its emptiness believe; then, Jesus enters the room with its door still closed, and beholding his presence the disciples believe.

John gives a nuanced range of reactions among the disciples, including Mary of Magdala, who do not attain the same faith response to the resurrection, yet each does come to believe and all are witnesses to the resurrection. Peter's speech in the first reading (Acts 10:34,37-43) describes the Church's foundation in these witnesses and its mission to proclaim Christ to others that they too may come to believe in him and "have their sins forgiven through his name."
